

Craig, since I emailed you last night I have done more praying and went to see my pastor. You see, he not only is my pastor but is my friend.

I told him the whole story about Alan and how he accused me of using profanity on the air and a few other things that I know about Alan, Don and Scott.

He basically said that it wasn't any of Alan's business. You don't go to your next door neighbor and tell him how he should talk unless you want him to dot your eye for you. I already knew that but I wanted to hear Bro. Morrow say it.

Personally, I would not like to hear any profanity on 3.947.5 but it's really none of my business. God will be the judge of that, not me and certainly not Alan Carlton(n5gky).

Alan's interpretation is what they now teach is for the "Great Universal Church." That's not the way the Bible teaches it but Alan has been to seminary so he knows it all.

As far as "ostracizing" is concerned, as The Chief says, "it ain't none of our business." Although, as a Christian, I would not like to hear my Lord's name taken in vain.

*God bless,
Joel*

PS Tim would you post this for everyone to see and clear the air?

Dear Joel

I have to ask you only one question. Do you know how much of a positive influence you are on frequency, to Doc as well as everyone else? I know that Doc has a way of looking at these matters and that it differs from those on 44 or wherever. But honestly Joel, if we can't love our brothers despite their flaws then we are no better than the worst in the bunch. If we are to ostracize Doc or be ostracized for our association with him, then we might not be available if and when the time comes that he need us concerning these matters. This level of judgment is damning in it's condemnation and inability to accept that there are sinners among us and that we might have to walk among the great unwashed.

Personally I think that our greatest work can be done in these areas. And NO Christian should ever condemn you for being associated with any one. What do they expect you to do, sit and debate and preach at only those who are vowed to follow the path.

You are in the right place
